

FACULTY OF GRADUATE STUDIES

DEVELOPMENT PRACTICE (MDP): INDIGENOUS DEVELOPMENT

The Master's in Development Practice (MDP): Indigenous Development teaches the skills required to be a successful practitioner of sustainable development in Canada and abroad. Indigenous knowledge and experience are at the core of the innovative curriculum that cuts across health, management, natural and social sciences.

This unique inter-disciplinary program is eminently practical. Problem-solving, case studies, group projects and critical self-reflection are emphasized and in-class assignments are designed to build the skills needed to be an effective development practitioner. With two three-month field placements - one in Canada and one outside of Canada - students have the opportunity to put their learning into practice, gain important development experience and establish important connections with organizations engaged in development around the world.

Students in the program complete several required courses and two field placements; they choose additional coursework from a list of approved electives or opt to complete a major research project. The expected time to graduate is 24 months (full-time) or 48 months (part-time).

SAMPLE CAREERS

MDP graduates are sought after in all sectors of sustainable development, including international, government, non-governmental organizations, international organizations, and the private sector. Potential career paths include development planner, program officer, community development consultant, NGO program coordinator, policy advisor/ analyst, researcher and a development evaluation specialist.

SAMPLE COURSES

GLOBAL CLASSROOM: INTEGRATED APPROACHES TO SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT PRACTICE

This course provides students with the basic core competencies and practical skills required of a "generalist" or "integrative" development practitioner and serves as the foundation course for the Master's in Development Practice curriculum. The course is offered concurrently at several universities around the world, and each week students have the opportunity to learn from expert practitioners and engage in discussion with each other. Course topics are grounded in a practical, multi-disciplinary approach that focuses on the inter-relationship of each of the following core fields of study: Health Sciences, Natural Sciences, Social Sciences and Management.

INDIGENOUS RESEARCH METHODS This course provides a review of the movement towards the decolonization of the Western model of research and the revitalization of indigenous research frameworks and methodologies. The course also offers analysis of Western research methods and both their histories in colonial practices as well as their potential usefulness in indigenous community-based development research and applications. The unique issues and principles involving ethical research in Indigenous communities are explored. The course also includes an overview of indigenous control of their own research and ethical review processes related to development issues, programs, and implementation.
